Realtor of the Week

JAMES "CHIC" CICCINI
"Chic"

I am a firm believer that a buyer should stay with one broker or salesman if he has confidence in him.

Too many people will tell a broker or salesman that they want him to locate a particular parcel in a certain area.

The broker or salesman, being convinced that a client is sincere after expressing his desire to stick with him will, with the client's best interest at heart, find what was originally wanted.

To set the record straight, for the benefit of buyers and the hundreds of realtors and salesmen who make a living by professional service, this is, in my opinion, the best advice:

1. If you have a broker and you see something you like, take down the address and the listing broker's name.

2. Call your broker and in not more than 20 minutes he will have all the information for you.

3. Your broker will not be peeved. He will, in fact, have the comforting knowledge that he was of service to you and that you thought enough of him to give him a chance to be of service.

ELIMINATE RAT RACE
This would, in my opinion, eliminate the one condition of the real estate profession that leads to a "rat race."

The most challenging phase of real estate for me is exchange. I like people to know about this phase, in

QUICK REACTION
Many drivers with quick reaction time wind up in an accident because they make their move without warning, according to insurance statistics. In a study of teenage and adult drivers, it was found that of those involved in accidents, more teenagers were hit from behind than adults.
